A. Marley

Me and my family live in the countryside. We have a beautiful, big house with a huge garden. The area is very peaceful because there aren't many people living here. There is only one shop, so when it's closed, we have to go to the city. I love living in the countryside!

B. Esther

I live in a block of flats and there are only other blocks around. Living here is very boring and people are sometimes loud when they throw parties at night. There are too many people here and I hope we'll move out some day.

C. Christine

Me and my family live in a detached house. We meet our neighbours very often for a cup of tea or coffee and whenever we have problems, we help each other. I wouldn't like to live anywhere else.

| 2.1. Life is very hard for animals that live in the tundra. It is very cold there and there is little food, so they have to look for it. Fortunately, some animals are able to live there, but they need to have thick fur and a lot of body fat to keep them warm during their long walks in search of something to eat. | A. Lizards can live in various conditions. Heat and sun are not a problem for them. Some of them are even able to use camouflage and take the color of a stone to avoid danger. |
| 2.2. The taiga is not the best place to live, as well. Animals find it hard to live there, and only the fittest can survive there. Birds find it quite easy to live there, because they are always able to find something to eat, and if not, they simply fly away to some warmer place. | B. The golden eagle is a bird of prey that likes to live in sparsely populated areas. Since it has very strong talons, it can hunt animals even bigger than itself! Cold weather isn't a problem, as eagles can fly long distances and move to other places if necessary. |
| 2.3. Deserts are inhabited mainly by small reptiles. Because it is very hot there, not many animals like such environments, and those that do are usually difficult to observe. They tend to hide in the sand or under cacti, which provide a cover from the sun. | C. The lion can live in various places, but it prefers the warmer ones (not the very hot ones, though). In places like these, it can control the local environment, hunt other animals, and relax in the shadow of the trees or in the grass. |

The African savannah is a place where it's always hot, or at least very warm. The heat isn't too oppressive for the animals, though, because there are some trees that produce shadow. Hunting food and finding water is also easy there, so the savanna is inhabited by many animals.

D.

The arctic fox lives mainly in Arctic regions. It has deep and thick fur and a lot of body fat. Its paws are adapted to extreme weather conditions and allow the fox to walk even on ice.

E.

Monkeys are intelligent animals, usually with long tails and smiling faces. They live in various environments and represent various species. Some people believe that we, the humans, are related to monkeys.
